EDST Student Workshop

Publishing in Academic Journals: Tips on how to get your work ‘out there’

Presented by Taylor Webb (EDST Associate Prof.) & Ee-Seul Yoon (EDST PhD Graduate)

Publishing a journal article is a daunting task for many graduate students; unfortunately, it has now become a basic expectation for those hoping to enter a career in academics. This workshop aims to take some of the mystique and fear out of the process. The topics discussed will include choosing an appropriate journal to propose your work, preparing your article, and surviving the rigours of peer review.

Faculty member Taylor Webb will draw on his considerable record of publications, along with his experience as a reviewer for journals including Educational Philosophy and Theory, Journal of Education Policy, International Journal of Qualitative Studies in Education, and Discourse: Studies in the Cultural Politics of Education, to provide some insight. In addition, recent PhD Graduate Ee-Seul Yoon will share her experiences regarding publication, which include placing articles in prominent journals during her time as a graduate student.

This discussion will be useful for people who are currently completing work that they would like to publish, as well as those who just want to know a little bit more about the process. Attending EDST workshops are a great way to connect with colleagues, so bring your lunch, come out and join us!

Wed, Nov. 6th

12:00-1:30pm

WMAX 110